DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY, ENVIRONMENT, AND SYSTEMS

The Department of Forestry, Environment, and Systems is designed to provide students with a variety of programs, multidisciplinary skills and knowledge for major aspects of forestry and natural resources. The Department offers numerous options and opportunities within areas in the field of forestry, environment, and systems, such as: silviculture and tree improvement, geoinformatics, forest ecology, forest management and biometry, forest engineering and forest aesthetics, and forest pathology and genetics.

Through diversified coursework, hands-on laboratory experiences, outdoor classrooms, and the practices at the experimental forests, students will gain a strong academic background in association with practical training in forestry, principles, and practices. The Department also provides students with the skills needed for effective communication in a natural resources profession.
